Don't file PILs on basis of unverified facts: SC to lawyers

Justice Chandrachud: After dismissing allegations of manipulations by Adani group companies, the Supreme Court on Wednesday said that petitions based on "unverified and immaterial" facts tended to diminish the impact of the socially beneficial PIL tool, reprimanding lawyers. Justice Anjanay Mahapatra. Justice Chandrachud said, concluding, we must observe that public law jurisprudence under Article 32 of the Constitution was expanded by this court to serve justice and provide ordinary citizens the opportunity to highlight legitimate grievances before this court. It has served as a tool to ensure justice and ensure accountability on public issues, where ordinary citizens have approached the court with well-researched petitions to highlight a clear cause of action. However, petitions that lack adequate evidence and rely on unverified and unrelated facts tend to, in fact, be counter-productive. A degree of caution must be kept in mind by members of civil society alike." Justice Chandrachud also said that the apex court was not intended to substitute the view of expert bodies with its own view and that courts are not to act as appellate bodies over policies of statutory regulators. It would interfere only after finding that the regulator's action is arbitrary or violative of constitutional or statutory mandates.
